Grace: Hi everyone. I'm Grace Nicolette.

Phil: And I'm Phil Buchanan.

Grace: We're the cohosts of Giving Done Right, and we're back with season two.

[music here to indicate tone shift]

In 2020, our lives were upended by a global pandemic, a greater reckoning on pervasive injustice and the brokenness in society and in our world. We witnessed or experienced deep loss in our communities and, in some cases, personally. Our world is not the same as before, and neither are we.

We also saw the ways in which givers were able to step up and support the vital work of nonprofits. And now we need donors to focus on the challenges of today like political polarization, racism, and climate change. It isn't an overstatement to say that the stakes have never been higher for impactful giving.

Phil: Agreed, Grace. Giving Done Right is vital in this moment, but you don't have to do it alone. This season, we're bringing you 10 eye-opening and provocative conversations with frontline nonprofit leaders as well as some of the most thoughtful big donors we know.

Grace: And we'll continue to talk about the hard conversations that surround giving. Like, how can you give with your family without straining or destroying those relationships? What do nonprofits really need from donors now but are afraid to say?; and how can you really know if your giving is making a difference? We'll also discuss how to listen to those closest to the issues you care about, and how personal setbacks and faith can powerfully shape giving.

Phil: It feels like real change is happening in how donors, big and small, approach their work. This season, we're excited to introduce you to some donors and nonprofit leaders showing us a new path forward.

Grace: Our first episode of Season 2 drops on Thursday, September 16th, and every Thursday after that for 10 weeks. You won't want to miss it, so be sure to subscribe to Giving Done Right on Apple Podcasts, Spotify, or wherever you get your podcasts.
